Increase of Employment Shown in May Report

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EXPANSION of employment in many basic industries of the country during May is reported by the Department of Labor. Out-door industrial activities continued to widen as the month advanced, the report said.

Increased requirements for farm help absorbed a large number of workers previously reported unem-ployed, while building operations expanded in all sections, providing work for many additional skilled and unskilled laborers. Favorable weather conditions greatly stimulated highway construction and increased railroad construction and maintenance of way activities. Many factories reported fairly satisfactory operating schedules. In some, however, and particularly in the boot and shoe industry, a downward trend was noted, largely due to seasonal influences.

Sir Samuel Hoare cited the success of Miss Earhart and Stultz as further evidence of the fact that the world is on the verge of great developments

He stressed the importance of the accurate weather reports, which, he said, had probably saved the Bremen from disaster. Much of the success of any great flight depended on "careful preparation in every detail," and he praised both Sir Alan Cobham and the organizers of the Friendship flight in this connection. The British Government, he said, is at present chiefly engaged in attempts to velop the flying route to India. When that route is organized, the next air way to which attention must be given was obviously the route between seaplane service linking North and South America, via the West Indies.

"By just so far as we develop in each community those who will think of the good of the group as well as for self; who will go beyond their own good, and deposit a sur-plus of thinking and effort for the common good, by just that far, what we may, in a double sense, call the commonwealth, grows.

"The desirable citizen is one who puts more in than he takes out. Was no maniform these men have been the builders of the city and the Nation."

"Over and above this program of community service lies the Rotary Club's duty to develop capability in men, both within and without the club," said Harry S. Fish of Sayre, Pa. He expressed the view that the primary object of Rotary was not the achievement of specific service in the realm of civics, but develop-ment of men in order that the community may achieve profit."

he continued, "changes perhaps as momentous and far-reaching as those we have experienced in recent years. Better administration of our commercial banks as a whole, with greater discrimination in favor of self-liquidating assets as against capital investments, payment of excessive interest on deposits, socalled chain banking, and a possibly nation-wide branch banking are just a few of the possible problems of the future. Henry Fairfield Osborn Jr., Philadelphia, partner of Redmond & Co., asserted that the growth and evolution of the bond investment field is "far from being as yet a finished story." He called attention to the fact that bond issues listed on the New York Stock Exchange as of Jan. 1 were more than 10 times as large in dollar value as the total estab-lished wealth of the country in 1850, and declared that the growth in bond investments in the past few decades had been "fantastically rapid." Improvement in Bank Advertising Bank advertising should keep pace with modern business methods and conditions, Miss Marjorie E. Schoeffel, assistant secretary and assistant treasurer of the Plainfield Trust Company of Plainfield, N. J., said. It is easier to see the new trend in financial advertising than to determine where that trend is taking us, Declaring that the problem of the financial advertiser today differs from that of even a few years ago, she continued: "The United States as a nation is thrifty, but the public to which banks are appealing is a more highly educated one than ever before. Our public is no longer saving to buy an umbrella for the rainy day. It is buying a closed car to keep

Wallace M. Davis, assistant cashier of the Citizen's Union National Bank of Louisville, called attention to the increasing losses by banks from bad checks and declared that there must be some way in which these losses can be averted. He recommended a campaign to educate the public to the importance of greater care in reveal-ing the location of bank accounts amount of balances, and in signing their names to thecks and deposit

PECIAL TO THE CERISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR RALEIGH, N. C.—In line with recent activities of the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Survey to bring the natural resources of the State to their highest point of efficiency, passage of the McNary-Woodruff bill by Congress, making possible the acquisition of forest reserves in the eastern part of the State, is thought to furnish additional facilities to the State's

-and the Roads That Once Were Open Will Be Open Once Again

Twenty million ordinary automobiles crowd the once open roads.

A hundred million people seeking freedom from the drabness of daily life ride up and down the modern version of the trails of pioneers.

Yet still there throbs in every vein, the old American call to romance and adventure, still the lure of going somewhere to meet the thrill of the unexpected.

But it's hard to get beyond the multitude in ordinary cars. There are so many of them. They fill so much of highways that were lonely yesterday.

There is a way to leave the crowds behind. There is a car so swift, so comfortable, so dependable that you can reach and cross the farthest horizon with ease. It is the Reo Flying Cloud of 1929.

Roads that once were open are open roads again when you drive this pleasure car. For the Reo Flying Cloud laughs at sluggish traffic as it alertly beats the rest to every opening. Hour after hour, it will hit a higher average speed to take you farther than the average car can cruise. Gayly it takes the roughest roads, the steepest climbs, the widest plains. With a zest that's all its own, it sails you out to the roads that are still open, while making the roads that once were open seem uncrowded because it does so many things better. There's a new Reo Flying Cloud of 1929 here for you to test. Try it out in every way you wish. Let it tell its story to you in its own sweet-running way.

CHICAGO-Foreign loans granted by the United States have on the whole stimulated imports into the borrowers' countries and therefore have been rather beneficial than American labor, said Robert R. Kuczynski at the Interna-tional Relations Institute at the University of Chicago. Dr. Kuczynski is a council member of the Institute of Economics at Washington, D. C.

"It may, of course, be," he continued, "that in the long run American loans to a country like Germany will increase that country's competi-tive strength. But as long as Germany goes on borrowing in America, she will have a surplus of imports, and she can finally redeem her Amer-ican loans only by a surplus of exports, that is, by successfully competing with American industry."

Open Market for Commodities

The theme of the institute's speaker was American loans to Germany and his conclusion was this:
"If America continues to export capital to Germany, she will find there an open market for her com-modities, the reparation plan will operate successfully, and the American savers will enjoy profitable investments. If America should stop lending, she would lose a good mar-ket, both for commodities and for capital, and reparation payments would become doubtful. But America cannot go on forever lending to Germany. Some day there must be a settlement. Some day America must be prepared to accept redemption with all its consequences.'

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—Once more the Pacific coast has furnished the winning crew in the principal race of the annual regatta of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association, as the result of Tuesday's races on the Hudson River. The crew of the University of California, the Pacific coast champions, won the four-mile race for varsity crews, for the Challenge Cup presented by Dr. Louis L. Seaman. 1910. The Country of the Course, however, to do it, as the Columbia University crew, last year's winners, and the crew of the University of Washington, were less than a length behind at the finish. In this race the four crews finished so close together that the winner and the third crew were not known to the spectators until the official announcement, and less than a length separated first and fourth.

In the freshman race, there was some delay at the start, due to a slight mishap in the Columbia boat, but the second start found the Midshipmen in third position, close behind. They maintained this order for the first half mile, but the Annapolis crew was creeping up on the others, rowing with a smooth, even stroke, with-less effort than any of the other crews. Several Surprises Are Within Possibility at Detroit

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO DETROIT-In the final tryouts for

DETROIT—In the final tryouts for the men's swimming team to represent the United States at the Olympic Games in Holland, several surprises are within possibility. The races here, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday at the Detroit Boat Club will bring out a number of first-class stars who did not compete in the recent A. A. U. national outdoor championships at San Francisco. Even were the field limited to those who competed in that meet, it is by no means assured that the results would be similar.

Of the six events to be tried here, the 100-meter free-style looks to be most uncertain. John Weissmuller of the Illinois Athletic Club, title defender in this event, was forced to break the world's record in this event at San Francisco to defeat by a touch George H. Kojac of the New York Boys' Club. Jojac appears to be improving his racing strategy, and this added to his strength may make him Weissmuller's most formidable rival. Walter Laufer of the Lake Shore Athletic Club, Chicago, who did not compete in outdoor races, is another rival capable of forcing Weissmuller to the limit.

Other Candidates

Some other likely candidates in this event, capable of turning to advantage any slump made by the three leaders, are John Woodd of Hawali, P. C. Samson of the I. A. C., James Bronson and George Fissler of the New York A. C., and a few of the college

In the 100-meter backstroke, Laufer and Kojac are the favorites, both having broken world's records and won all titles in this style of swimming. Warren Kealoha of Hawaii set an Olympic record in winning the backstroke title in 1924, but he will not try to qualify here. In the absence of Laufer, Kojac won the backstroke title in San Francisco. Arthur Hargrave of the Olympic Club, who finished second to Kojac, is another prospect who will meet keen competition from David Young and Fissler of the New York A. C. Paul Wyatt of Erie, Pa., is another possibility. He was second at the last Olympics. At 400 meters, freestyle, Weissmuller still looks invincible, though C. L. Crabbe of Hawaii gave him a good race in the outdoor championships. Samson is a star at this distance. Harry Glancy of the Penn A. C., Philadelphia, Austin Clang of

Crabbe Is a Favorite

An outstanding favorite for the 1500-meter swim is Crabbe, who won the recent A. A. U. championship in world's record time. This distance is out of the field of Weissmuller and the field of Weissmuller and the probable on it in the western open last year.

In the 800-meter relay, the probable place winners are Weissmuller, Kojac.

Laufer and Samson. Wallace O'Connor, who swam on the winning team at the last Olympics, helped the I. A. C. to a new world's record at 880 yards in San Francisco, and may again win a place on the United States team. A race at 200 meters is to be held to determine the four regulars and two substitutes for this event.

Breast stroke prospects for the United States at 200 meters are reduced somewhat by the question of Walter Spence's citizenship. This Brooklyn Y. M. C. of them all are those of flowered chiffon or mousseline-de-soie. Made with a semi-fitting bodice with a deep V at the back and a round line at th front of the neck, with a skirt which is plain and tight around the hips and then bursts into ruffles which droop toward the back until they nearly to the floor, this type of frock is the very embodiment of the atmosphere of summer. For the woman of mature figure, the same flowered material is made with a skirt composed of layers of the chiffon cut in deep points which float on the air as one walks, giving an extremely graceful effect.

Diaphanous Materials

The designs of these figured chiffons or silk muslins are in bright flowers on a background of gray biege, black or blue, and they are usually worn over a slip of georgette or crepe-de-chine of the same color. There is one pattern, however, which is shown in any number of the collections and which has been one of the great successes of the season that has a geranium-red background covered with nosegays of flowers in the different shades of gray. Another favorite pattern is of cream-colored roses and pale gray-green leaves on a black background. A frock of this material worn over a slip of black georgette which has a wide band of Chantilly lace at the top and around the lower edge is one of the most successful models in the collection of Mme. Louiseboulanger, to whom, by the by, belongs the credit of creating skirt with the long drooping

Frocks of tulle are also seen in all the new collections, in both black and colors, and these are usually made with a satin or taffeta bodice, some-times veiled with a layer of the tulle, which also forms a transparent yoke at the neck. The skirts of these

The skirts of these frocks are either made in layers of pleated tulle, or they have a plain yoke around the hips on which are arranged full gathered breadths of the tulle, overlapping one another and forming an uneven hem-line at the bottom. waist to the hem with rows of narrow lace ruffles, generally placed in diagonal lines which form a long point at the back. The bodice is most frequently of the plain material with inserted bands of the lace and there is either a transparent yoke or a long U-shaped opening at the back of the neck which is filled in with the lace. A ciré satin or moiré ribbon of the same shade as the gown forms a girdle and is tied in a big choux or bow at one side of the waist-line. .

Taffeta and Crepe-Satin

Frocks of crisp taffeta, either in plain color or one of the lovely flowered or speckled designs, are ideal for the cocler summer evenings. There are two distinctly different ways of using this material. One is on the order of the "robe-de-style, which at home is known as the "period gown," with long, full skirt dip-ping a bit at the back and often edged with a band of tulle or em-broidery and with a tight old-fashioned bodice with transparent net yoke—a costume particularly suited to the younger woman; and the other, equally appropriate for maid or matron, in which the silk is wrapped tightly around the figure and bunched in a huge choux at one side of the waist-line or in two big loops, which give an old-time bustle effect at the back. Whether of the plain or figured material, there is never any trimming, save a crystal or rhinestone buckle, on these taffeta frocks. Flowered taffetas are very much used for these summer evening gowns and in some cases there is a choux or a long, floating, pointed drapery at the side of flowered chiffon of exactly the same pattern and coloring as that of the silk. This combination of two materials of the same designs is one of the novelties of the season. Tiny dots or speckles, which look as if they had once been dots but had run a bit, are popular designs in these new taffetas. One which was seen recently was in a lovely silver-gray with "speckles" of the waist from which long straight

Artist as Traveler

MONG the best travel writersthose who travel as artists and a not as reporters — there is a tendency to waste time at the beginning, to potter about, to strike an attitude; and nowadays we like attitudes. Tomlinson spends a chapter tuning in with a popping and squealing of guesses, delays, a plaint of moods, before he moves into the key of the clear majestic ether of "Tidemarks" and "The Sea and the Jungle." D. H. Lawrence—a far better travel writer than novelist inflates every preliminary incident of train and boat with straining little blasts. Louis Golding clinches our generalization, which we shall endanger by further investiga-

We know his quality. He is of the self-conscious modern order and is all the better for that. There is a fecundity in his metaphors, an Old Testament body to them, a feeling that he has grasped his subject with his hands. Tchekhov always de-manded this plastic sense. Mr. Golding is excellent when he thus grasps the material he is modeling; less satisfactory when he makes a series of allusive gestures at it. The traveler must move forward from ex-perience to experience. He must not appear to be standing still or he will be obliterated by the strange en-vironment he is describing.

The Palestine Experiment Mr. Golding is a Jew, and he sailed from Dierba, the island of the Lotus Eaters, for Egypt and Palestine, those ancient lands of his race. He no great adventures. He does not travel as a guide, antiquarian or historian. He is strongly conscious of his race, a believer in its destiny, but he does not travel to open old wounds or to gibe at the Moslems and Christians. He goes feeling the Mediterranean warmth, the Greek warmth, in his bones, and would like to persuade himself that if Odysseus was not a Jew, he might well have

In the Emek valley Mr. Golding discovered the colonies of the newly settled Jews from eastern Europe. At Ain Charod there was a remarkable colony of intellectuals, who in the desire to build up the new Palestine, had thrown up their careers to become laborers, sacrificing themselves that their children might enjoy the wilderness they had gone in to pos sess. These chapters are vivid and moving, and there is plenty of humor in them. Mr. Golding approves of the Palestine experiment, and we do not hear of the Arab side of the question. The artist is a poor politician, but a man has persuasion in his ink who can make such a has already described in "Across Three Oceans." He now tells of the reader who prefers discursions to continuous narrative. Mr. O'Brien avers that he always plays for safety, dislikes storms and avoids everything that looks too much like adventure, but he could not expect to have it all his own way with the elements. The Kelpie, his first yacht, a 26-ton cutter, took part in the gun running for the South of Ireland in 1914, but the episode was ludicrously peaceful. The end also of the Kelpie was unheroic: it foundered on the coast of Galloway in a calm sea

He remarks upon the contrast today between the stand-ardization of American life in general and the absence of standards in American literature and American thinking about literature; and he rightly insists upon the paramount need of a "convention" that shall wisely use and not willfully reject their context, Professor Foerster's book forms a weighty and impressive whole, admirably composed, well thought out and well set out. So tightly woven are the strands of this discussion that it is impossible to give a fair summary or indica-tion of it within the limits of a necessarily brief notice. Poe's exaltation of beauty and his onslaught upon "the heresy of the didactic"; Emer-son's eagerness for beauty crossed with reverence for didacticism; Lowell's feebly right effort to mediate between the two points of view, and Whitman's naturalism are passed in long and detailed review. The method in each of these chapters is much the same: the critic's range of reading is indicated carefully; his literary "creed" is briefly formulated; and then each article in this "creed" is examined and commented upon in

In the final chapter on contem porary criticism a more elaborate "creed" is set up: the outstanding characteristic of the best criticism of the day is that of literary humanism, that is, a dualism in which humanity is set over against nature, not con-sidered, as the nineteenth century considered humanity, as part of nature. Professor Foerster closes with an impressive plea, none the less eloquent because it is expressed so sanely and in such moderate terms, for a new "integration," a new establishment of connections be-tween the present and the past, a new respect for long and great

One is the arrival of a seasonal course from the National Association course are sufficient.

This year the poster, sent forth an-nually to further the sale of "Books for Your Vacation," is futuristic in a conservative sort of way. That is, conservative sort of way. That is, you can see it is meant to represent a young woman sitting under a tree and reading a book. So you will not adopted are best explained by the mind that the tree appears to be leaning at a greater angle than the Tower at Pisa, or that the grassy hilltop about is covered apparently with greenish waves tipped with reddish foam. But you may be disturbed by finding that some perfectly straight pieces of the pinkish fringe of the leaves seem to have fallen into strange places. One of them appears to parallel the tree trunk and another the edge of the book. It ought to make a good guessing game, what these strayed fringes represent, and what supports them.

Still it's an attractive poster. And for us it revives an old problem. Not, shall we read books on our vacation; but, why can't we read them out of doors? Theoretically, the out-of-doors should increase one's reading pleasure. Actually, in that that's the best thing to do.

The "Week-End Library," in case you don't know, is a single volume. This is its second issue. Its jacket bears another of those pictures of outdoor readers, in this instance man and a woman, back to back for greater concentration, under a huge sunshade. Hence an impulse to open up the undeveloped countries of the other continents. Economic competition was, of course, a basic idea in the Europe of that time, and it was this more than any other factor that compelled intervention by the state in the enterprise of its traders. The inspiration of patriotism and power was, so to speak secondary, and was counterbalanced to some extent by the humanitarian conceptions which grow out of the French Revolution. Whether political control was absolute, as in Africa, or was exercised indirectly, as in Asia through the power of capital, the

In that world of superlative color and beauty I prefer, or rather re-

ter's "Toward Democracy." There is, of course, much to be said for the "Golden Treasury," the "Magic Carpet," the admirable Rittenhouse anthologies and others. Ernest Dowson, I should say, belongs by right to an idyllic mountain glade. The poems of Rupert Brooke I first heard read aloud at a camp-fire high in the Snowy Range of the Rockies, read aloud by a young American poet who could pass for Brooke's double. Now I never read or hear them without recalling that wild and appropriate scene-the dark lowering mountains, the bright fire, the scent of the pines. the voice and figure of the reader, both in silhouette as it were. Hence forth to me Brooke is the poet of the camp-fire. I am tempted to proclaim this the supreme test of all, the very Thoreau I needs must class near him; though his journals differ structurally from the essays, they vary little in effect, being both interpretive and inspirational. They are of the outdoors and for the outdoors as few journals are. It goes without saying that all the "huge complaining diaries" are taboo in the summer library. Unrest, misanthropy, cynicism have no place there, at least in my estimation. I could not stoop to them in such a setting.

All books of nature and travel seem naturally to belong, yet even here there is place for discrimination and experiment. Rather than any of Muir's more serious works, I would choose the first volume of his letters which seem to me to surpass all others of their kind in the expression of earth-love. Indeed I can think of no other letters so admirably adapted for the greenwood. Certainly it is no place for Pliny, Jefferson, even Lamb. I believe, however, that Emily Dickinson's exquisite epistles might prove a happy choice. Of travel literature my own preference is for the quaint and the marvelous which brings an occasional smile, yet seems not wholly improbable in such a setting -Sir Marco Polo, Sir John Mandeville and their school. The modernists are somehow lacking in flavor, though a few of them may pass the the fireside type so far as I am concerned; a distinctly summer volume is rare indeed. Yet my experience vouches for a few perfect ones-such as "The Biography of an Elderly Gentleman," by Jean Kenyon Mac-Kenzie, and "A Childhood in Brit-tany," by Anne Douglas Sedgwick. The question of proper fiction is no more easily settled than the rest. Again it is what not to take rather than the ultimate choice that looms most prominently before one. Not Don Quixote surely, or the heavier type of romance, as assuredly not the ultra-realistic realism. As in the Очевидно, что богатство, которое восхваляет Библия, и которое чудесно выявил. Христос Инсус, состоит в признании Бога. Духа, источником всякого добра. Божий народ должен был быть всегда в состоянин распознавать постоянно проявляемое изобилие Божие, как делал то псалмопе вец, когда он утерждал: "Как многочисленны дела твои, Господи! Все седела: ты премудро; земля полна произведений (богатств) твоих." And here the flags ended and the field began. . The round shadow mounted up to the mearest flowers and paused. There was a path no more, only a vast forest of buttercups, only a dazzling show of gold all about the little brown arms and neck The voyager moved forward as all true voyagers do, straight into the depths of excitement, and the petals rubbed against the rounded cheeks and caught at the little curls.

And then a big something hap-pened. There came a whir of dark wings straight from the midst of the round shadow; a sudden hasty movement, and a bird shook itself free of the flowers and rose like a singing rocket straight up into the tremendous sky. The round shadow sat down hurriedly, and the small figure collapsed with it, an emphatic sub-

TRADING IS DULL AFTER EARLY RALLY

Short Covering by Professionals-General Movement Is Irregular

NEW YORK, June 20 (P)-Stiffening money rates checked a promising rally in today's stock market.

Prices of standard industrials and rails advanced 1 to 5 points in the early trading, and a few specialties were marked up 6 to 15 points, but early trading, and a few specialties were marked up 6 to 15 points, but these gains were cut down, or converted into losses, on a renewal of selling pressure. Trading showed a tendency to turn dull on the rallies and pick up on the declines.

Call money advanced from 6 to 6½ per cent as banks called about $10,000,000 in loans. Time money was on a flat 5% per cent basis, instead of 5% to 5%, and an advance of % of 1 per cent was made in the rates on banker's acceptances.

The New York Stock Exchange reported that brokers' loans on June 1 were 9.46 per cent of the market value of securities listed, the highest percentage since March, 1926, and contrasting with 8.95 per cent May 1 and 8.13 per cent on June 1, 1927.

Weekly steel trade reviews reported a further seasonal contraction in output, with consumers showing little interest in third quarter requirements. Otherwise there was little in the day's news to influence the price movement. A drive against the equipment issues was based on reports of unusually small orders from the leading railroads. American Locomotive dropped 4 points to 94, the lowest price since 1926, and American Car & Foundry and Lima Locomotive each fell more than 2 points to low levels for the year.

The closing was strong. Best prices of the day were made by many prominent stocks in the final hour, when several high-priced issues responded to the squeezing of the short interest. Radio sold 11 points beyond its previous close, International Harvester 13, and U. S. Cast Iron Pipe 18. National Tea also moved up 10, and Case Threshing, Delaware & Hudson, Midland Steel Products preferred and Commercial Solvents 5to 6 points. Total sales, approximated 2,200,000 the strong exchanges.

The bond market was more active today and prices were firmer, apparently reflecting the smart recovery of the stock market. Price movements were narrow, but virtually every group had a better tone. Rails chiefly were in demand.

had a better tone. Rails chiefly were in demand.

American Agricultural Chemical refunding 7½s advanced a point, and Andes Copper 7s. Dodge Brothers 6s and others made smaller gains.

St. Louis-San Francisco 6s attracted most buyers in the rail group, but the price was unchanged at 101½. Central Pacific 5s moved up a point, and the St. Louis issues. Erie 5s and a few others showed fractional gains. There was some irregularity, however, Chesapeake & Ohio convertible 5s declining more than 4 points to a new low for the year at 102½.

Public utilities were inclined to heaviness. Public Service of New Jersey ½s.j.n initial trading, opened at 120 and eased off to 118½.

The foreign list was steady.

9 Million For New Construction

Serving one out of every 55 wired homes in the United States and one out of every 93 using gas, the Associated System anticipates a growth of 40,000 new customers during 1928.

To take care of the new customers and the improvements that are constantly being made, the 1928 budget calls for an investment of $9,000,000 in new construction and equipment. $39,000,000 was spent for this purpose from 1925 to 1927 inclusive.

WOOL MARKET BUYING STILL RATHER QUIET

Domestic Lines Favored-Manufacturing Here and Abroad Less Active

The wool market continues to mark

The wool market continues to mark time.

Here and there sales are being made, mostly in small quantities, but the mills are not showing any marked preference for any particular description of wool, except that the business being done is restricted almost wholly to domestic lines.

The interest which has been shown in foreign wools has been very slight for several months past. The market may properly be described as "spotty."

Values are generally well maintained throughout the list. The early bought and lowest priced wools from the West are now getting fairly well sold and the higher priced wools from the West are now getting fairly well sold and the higher priced wools from the West are now getting fairly well sold and the higher priced wools from the West are now getting fairly well sold and the higher priced wools from the West are now getting fairly well sold and the market now is more or less in the doldrums been a fairly good initial business in heavyweight lines, in the doldrums between the initial and repeat order business. Adverse weather conditions more or less generally through the country have been erally through the country have been erappossible for holding up retail trade. Manufacturing conditions in England, and to some extent on the Continent, have been dissimilar to those which have been dissimilar to those which have been prevailing in this country, although, within the last week, there has been some improvement in England in the business being done among the topmakers. This has been mostly in the crossbred grades. The finer tops out of merino wools continue rather slow, and prices for them are possibly a ha penny in favor of the buyer.

On the Continent, while trade has slowed up somewhat in France, and still is not too brisk in Italy, elsewhere in the continental wool centers there is a fairly active state of affairs. Especially is this true in Germany, where the manufacturers are quite busy.

Mohair is still rather inactive in the local market. There has been more or less buying for this c

Sacrifice To sum up the various complicated lefinitions of sacrifice, one may say, firstly, that sacrifice is an act, beonging to the sphere of worship, in which a material offering is pre-sented to the Deity and consumed in His service; secondly, it is-the sur-render of anything for the sake of something else.

The European Coal Problem

NE of the most important questions which the Consultative Economic Committee examined at its recent meeting at Geneva was that of the continued depression in the coal trade, and the committee advised that an inquiry should be undertaken by the Economic Organization of the League of Nations to advise what should be done. All the coal-producing countries are under a wave of depression caused by excess of output over market demands, the result being widespread unemployment among the miners, low wages and losses on production. Naturally, the coal owners would like to raise their prices as the simplest way out of their difficulties, and some of them think that this could be done by an international agreement for the limitation of output and the allocation of markets for the export trade. For this reason they look hopefully to the inquiry of the Economic Organization of the League, and trust that the Council of the League, when the question comes before it, may devise some scheme of international agreement for the fixing of prices. The British coal owners, however, continue to oppose any such idea, for they believe that their quota of export in an international trust would be fixed on their present share of the world's markets, which is far below what they feel they are entitled to. They are not thinking of international agreements at present, but are directing all their energies to placing their industry on a paying basis, believing that, great as their losses are for the moment, their superior resources will enable them to see the crisis through. Unfortunately for the British mine owners, the other coal-producing countries all increased their output during the British strike. the United States alone contributing more than 60 per cent of the British deficit in 1926 by her increased efforts, which should make those who talk of an agreement between the coal producers of Europe for limiting supply as the best way of remedying the present depression in the coal trade remember the sad fate which overtook the British rubber plantations when they attempted to raise prices by restricting their output without coming to an agreement with the Dutch.

Moreover, Germany, by the nationalization of her coal mines, has cheapened and improved her fuel, and has now gained the whip hand over her continental rivals. She is not likely to surrender the advantage which she has obtained by agreeing to limit her output for the benefit of other countries which lag behind her. The key to the problem is not to be found in artificial agreements and raising prices, but by following the German method of cheaper production, which has enabled her to increase her output and pay the Ruhr coal miners an increased wage. The British mine owners have tried the plan of district combines and the levy of threepence a ton for their export trade. But although a fillip may in this way be given to export, such a plan can only succeed in increasing profits if the price of coal in the home market is more than sufficient to cover the subsidy.

An international combine for the elimination of waste caused by unlimited competition may ultimately come about. But it must be an agreement, not to raise prices, but to afford a cheaper and better supply of coal to the manufacturing industries. It is only in this way the world would stand to benefit by international action for the solution of the coal problem.

The Rhineland Evacuation

THAT the evacuation of Rhineland will be a more complicated matter than it seemed to be when it was first mooted cannot be denied. At that time it was taken for granted that evacuation would immediately follow a Franco-German agreement. M. Poincaré took up the theme that had been treated at Thoiry by M. Briand and Herr Stresemann. He intimated that if the German debt could be commercialized a general arrangement would follow, and it was understood that he too was prepared to withdraw French troops from German

Now other countries come into the picture. They say that the occupation was not merely for the purpose of assuring the payment of reparations, but was also for the purpose of guaranteeing the security of Europe. Therefore all those countries which feel that the occupation under the Versailles Treaty guarantees their own particular security, have a right to be heard before the occupation is brought to an end. The demand seems plausible enough at first sight.

Poland has especially interested itself in this protest. The matter does not concern France and Germany merely. Neither does it concern solely France's associates in the occupation-England and Belgium. It vitally interests central European countries, including Czechoslovakia and Poland. They, too, are signatories of the Versailles Treaty. They need a few more years of uninterrupted peace in order to settle down. They insist that withdrawal of the troops would be unfair to them, and that they must be consulted before any decision is taken. The contention is certainly worth examination. Nevertheless if it is considered closely it will be observed that evacuation is possible not so much because of a prospective reparations bargain, but chiefly because of the Locarno Pacts. Those Locarno Pacts contain the promise of Germany not to make war to recover any territory which was lost by Germany and incorporated in France. It is Locarno, therefore, which makes evacuation logical and

The Locarno Pacts apply, too, to the Polish and Czechoslovakian frontiers. It is true that on the eastern side Germany is not as explicit as on the western side, but still there is a pledge of arbitration, and the prospects of strife are considerably reduced if not totally obliterated. Poland would do better to rely on the Locarno Pacts than on the French occupation. There is something unfriendly in the attitude of a country which places itself in opposition to the withdrawal of the troops of a second country from the territory of a third country. Not in this way will the sentiment of Locarno be encouraged. Poland would be wisely advised not to meddle with the relations of France and Germany—if it is not for the purpose of improving them. Improved relations between two countries ought to imply improved relations among other countries, and every step toward reconciliation should favorably affect Europe in

Another Jewel in Aviation's Crown

TRIKING though it may be in its appeal to popular sentiment, the fact that Miss Amelia Earhart is the first woman to cross the ocean by air is of less importance, perhaps, than her demonstration that the type of travel of which she made use is comparatively safe and ought to be developed. She says she was only a passenger. She speaks in the highest terms of her companions, Wilmer Stultz, the pilot, and Louis Gordon, the mechanic. But a passenger can do much to make or mar a venture of this kind, where a cool head, a steady hand and a brave heart are essential. All these she possessed, and the world has acknowledged her a heroine.

The ocean can be kinder than it was to the monoplane Friendship when it winged its way eastward after it left the rugged coast of Newfoundland. It can be beautiful and calm and clear. Its surface is not always rough, churned into great waves by the wind, bespattered by rain, hidden by fog, or made difficult of navigation by driving snow. These obstacles the monoplane had to surmount, and there was barely an hour in the journey that the sea was visible to the fliers, who had to rely almost entirely upon their instruments, especially when the radio gave out at a critical point in the

How well the Friendship acquitted itself is already an old story. It fought its way through storm and fog, and although it landed on the Welsh coast two hours short of its destination at Southampton because of a fuel supply considered insufficient, it gave eloquent testimony to the reliability of the trimotored machine and to the value of pontoons, which permit a plane to come down on the water, while it afforded another opportunity to exemplify the courage and endurance of the youth of today, whose realm is the sky with its limitless dimensions. The world is now at the feet of the fliers. They have placed another jewel in the crown of aviation. Only the reckless would dare say that the day is far off when aviation will reign supreme over other means of transportation

Prohibition in New York City

AWSON PURDY, writing in the New York Times, compares the arrests for drunkenness in New York City with those in various cities throughout the United States, East, West, North, and South, to the great advantage of New York. In fact, the logical conclusion which the reader draws from his statements, if they be accepted as written, is that New York City is comparatively dry while many cities of the United States are wringing wet.

Taking the number of arrests for drunkenness for New York as twenty per 10,000 inhabitants, Mr. Purdy finds the ratio larger in nearly every community examined. In all but ten of the 263 cities of which data have been gathered by the so-called Moderation League, an antiprohibition organization, he avers, is the ratio of arrests to inhabitants greater. Berkeley, Calif., leads the list with only five arrests per 10,000 inhabitants, while East Orange, N. J., with but ten, comes second. Mr. Purdy attempts to forestall the critics who would obviously assert that the great difference between Pittsburgh, Kan., with 263 arrests per 10,000 inhabitants, and the meager twenty of New York is due to the laxity of the police in the latter city, by stating that even this could not account for the marked difference between New York and most of the cities where investigation has been made. While figures under certain conditions may be convincing, yet many will hold that the figures compiled by the Moderation League, which Mr. Purdy quotes, do not adequately set forth the situation. They do not convince the thoughtful that New York is really a Sahara in comparison with Lewiston, Me., or Wichita, Kan. That New York State appropriates nothing for the enforcement of the Volstead Act except for the support given to the state police; that New York City especially has voted wet whenever the opportunity has offered; that the Governor of New York State is openly for the sale of intoxicants—these facts have important bearing upon this question. It will take something more than Mr. Purdy's figures to carry assurance to keen observers that states where prohibition has been on the statute books for half a century suffer greatly in comparison with New York as to the amount of liquor consumed and as to its

Without question a strong sentiment prevails in New York in favor of repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment or modification of the Volstead Act. Accordingly, with the government of the state and city notoriously favorable to such repeal or modification, and with the enforcement of the Volstead Act in the hands of federal officers and the state police alone, a comparatively small body, is it likely that arrests for intoxication would be a fair criterion of the condition of the city as to enforcement of the prohibitory law? Mr. Purdy passes over this phase of the case too lightly, so lightly, indeed, that his array of figures will fail to convince those who have given deep consideration to the whole

The Choice of the People of China

THERE has sprung into activity in many of the provinces of China which have fallen under the sway of the southern Nationalists an impulse to progress which bodes well for the future of the Chinese people and threatens the future of the Chinese militarists. It is but natural that the Cantonese, more extensively in contact with the western world than any other group of Chinese and considerably more volatile mentally, should carry with them and disseminate wherever they go the progressiveness that characterizes the United States and many of the nations of Europe. In consequence good roads are being built, schools and universities being established and other steps of a similar nature being taken in many of the localities south of the Yellow River.

But to establish and maintain schools, to build motor roads, to establish public utilities of any sort requires funds, and those funds are obtainable in China from but one source, that of taxation. The people of the various provinces are imposing those taxes upon themselves. All well and good, but the Chinese masses are far from wealthy and only a certain amount of money can be raised by taxation. For some years past the military overlords have taxed the people under them to the very limit, which means further taxation for schools and good roads is impossible. The awakened people of China are determined to have these benefits, and the alternatives are presented of taxation for the support of armies or taxation for the maintenance of public institutions. Having glimpsed, if not actually tasted, the fruits of better conditions there can be no question as to the choice of the people of China. Schools and roads they will have; the armies must suffer. And this is a defeat of the Chinese war lords which far transcends the issue of battles, whether they be in the north or the south of the great Asiatic republic.

Edwin T. Meredith

MONG the outstanding figures who in recent A years have given an unfailingly good report of themselves to the people of Iowa, none has been more conspicuous than Edwin T. Meredith, publisher of farm journals and a former Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet of President Wilson. It is safe to say that those who knew Mr. Meredith best will testify most convincingly to his constructive Americanism. The impression which he gave on first acquaintance-was that few could typify more correctly than he the open-handedness and open-heartedness of the American gentleman and scholar.

Mr. Meredith, because of his inherent faith in the teachings of his own political party, was not the political ally of many of his leading townspeople of Des Moines, Ia. But if he lacked the sympathy of his business and social companions politically, he enjoyed to the full their confidence and esteem in all the other contacts of a busy career. Among his familiars none was more genuinely respected.

There remains the satisfying and encouraging tradition that America is, as heretofore, the land of opportunity for the ambitious and courageous. Few have more convincingly proved the truthfulness of this theory than Edwin T. Meredith. He rose by his own efforts to a position of influence because of his readiness to share with others the rewards which came to and through him. Perhaps his greatest ambition was not gratified. His friends had hoped that at some time he would be called to the highest political office within the gift of the people of his country. That he was equipped for such service could not have been seriously doubted. Possibly he hoped some day to be able to render that great service. He would neither have been asked for nor would be have given quarter to those within his own party who proclaim the doctrine of nullification or evasion. His personal standard was also his political standard. He could not stoop to the practice of duplicity.

It makes little difference where men such as he write the record of their careers, whether in high places where those who run may read, or in the home-town business circle where only a few may see. Departing, they leave to those who come after a heritage whose worth none can estimate, which is an unceasing inspiration to high, honest, and consecrated endeavor.

Editorial Notes

The Cincinnati Enquirer says: "A town without an airport now knows how a town without a railroad used to feel." Population has become so dense, however, in many places served by railroads that more and more it is becoming necessary to turn to those towns that are still without a railroad for a space large enough for a landing field.

The attendance of William H. Taft at the semicentennial reunion of the class of 1878 at Yale University recalls the fact that while Mr. Taft is Chief Justice of the United States, the other members of the highest bench are Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, an interesting point for some historical research.

That it is not only the size of an institution that determines its worth is proven by the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, which is one of the smallest departments of Harvard University. For no less than sixty-one of the college presidents in the United States graduated from it.

The American Federation of Labor told the Pullman car porters it was no time to strike, and they took the tip.

It requires more than wise saws to make a good platform.

"Flying" Western Australia

TOW was I to see a big stretch of Western Australia | station at intervals of half-an-hour's flying. No boats within the ten days which was all the time at my on the sea or shore, no animals on the land to be seen within the ten days which was all the time at my disposal before I was due to sail from Perth for South Africa? The answer clearly was: "Fly There," the motto and device of the West Australian Airways Limited, a concern which has been running a mail and passenger service to the far north since 1921.

So at 6:15 next day I was seated in the car of the De Havilland four-seater with the pilot in his cockpit behind and the dawn just coming up over the eucalyptus trees that fringe the Perth airdrome. Just before we took the air thirty black swans in military formation flew over us to their feeding grounds.

It was summer time in Western Australia, a time o bush fires, when farmers clear the land of timber by burning, and when everyone is on the watch lest the fires "get For the first 150 miles of the flight north from Perth, therefore, while we were passing over a country planted largely with fruit and vines and later on with large fields of wheat, there was a smoky haze of fires that made it difficult to see the ground clearly when we were more than 2000 feet up. The wheat fields were a mile or more in area, irregularly rectangular and lying like patches dotted over an immense primitive bush only awaiting the plow to be equally fertile. A A A

By 9:50 a. m. we have arrived at Geraldton, a little port and agricultural supply town, the end of the railway line, and after breakfast we take off again and pass over country which is almost entirely uncultivated and only used for sheep stations. The population is only a small decimal point to the square mile. We are making for the Murchison River, and beyond it there appears on the horizon a dense black column of smoke rising 6000 or 7000 feet high, the sign of some particularly violent bush fire, and looking like a volcano.

The heat of the day and the heat of the fires perhaps makes the air "bumpy," and it is unpleasantly rocky until re reach a big bay in the sea called Hamelin Pool. Hamelin Pool is a wonder of different shades of translucent green fringed by curving beaches of glistening white. But with the water still, so that the great fields of seaweed on the under-water reefs are marked as clearly as the land outside the sea, it is difficult to say where sea ends and land begins. By 3:30 in the afternoon we have reached the port of Carnarvon, three streets, a little shallow harbor, an island inhabited by pelicans and Pacific sea birds, two hotels, and the offices of the agencies that buy wool from the big sheep stations near at hand.

It has taken more than seven hours to fly 530 miles, but it would have taken us days to reach it by steamer. Carnaryon is the center of a strange industry—the catching of sharks, devil fish, sting rays, dugongs and other monsters of the deep, including numerous turtles. The skins of the fishes are tanned and make excellent shoe leather, the flesh of the sharks is dried in strips and sold to the Dutch East Indies and adjoining islands, the fins are exported to China and Japan.

4 4 4 The next day starting again at dawn we flew in a three hours' hop to Onslow, a little group of twenty or thirty houses on a desolate beach; a second hop of two hours to Raebourne, also a little coastal depot, then a dash inland over iron-red hills to the mining area of Whim Creek, a spatter of a few white houses and halfdeserted mine workings on a hillside, and a last hop of forty minutes to Port Hedland, our destination for the

The whole of this day's flying was over a positively primeval country, patches of dull gray bush, patches of stark bare sand, dried-up clay pans which were lakes when it rained, and only a house or building of a sheep because we are so high, no roads and of course no railways because we are far into the back of beyond. The only sign of human existence and organization, the straight lines of occasional rabbit-proof fences, presented themselves because of a cleared area on either side, and stretched like lines of longitude over the horizon.

The whole of the area between Carnarvon and Port Hedland is covered by sheep stations. These are as big as English counties, some bigger, but the more recent of them are not allowed to be more than 1,000,000 acres in extent. At Port Hedland we arrived in time for lunch. Afterward I drove to the nearest sheep station, called Pippingarra, which has a mere 250,000 acres and carries 13,000 sheep. The dullness of appearance of the bush disappears at ground level and one sees a great variety of trees, of bushes, and of little scrubby plants which take the place of grass.

At the station we stopped for a short while and watched the tall, slow and stately moving aboriginal women drawing water from the tanks filled by the pump of a musically creaking wind wheel, and we basked in the sun at a temperature of about 120 degrees. The "cold water" coming out of the tanks where it is stored is startlingly hot. This part of the land had recently had a good rain and there were pools still lying about beside the bush tracks so that we had to pioneer our way around them amid four-foot high ant hills, trees, and irregularities of the ground. But the rain had caused a vast uprush of fragrant growth from the spinnifex—that little dry prickly clump that is the mark of dry country-and from the other growing things, and the air was full of delicious, stimulating and faintly aromatic odors. When the night came down the aborigines retired to their camp where they lighted their fires-as man has done since the Stone Age. There was no sound in the air but the musical turning of a wind wheel and the far-off sound of the aborigines' pleasant laughter, and no sight in the world save the faint outline of the few buildings and some trees and the dimly seen ground. It seemed then, in that warm, delicious air, very easy to understand the love of the bush that comes to men in Australia.

+ + + Next day we flew from Port Hedland to Broome, 310 miles in four hours, then 100 miles on to Derby, a tiny place of two baobab shaded streets of bungalows, a central garden, and a jetty that serves as place of call for steamers going to Java and Singapore. Even 1000 feet up the air was full of the scent of mangrove mud. Ten minutes' wait at Derby, time enough to "do" the town, buy two baobab nuts carved with symbolic animals by aborigines, and two boomerangs, and then on the plane again to return to Broome-540 miles before lunch at 1:30 p. m.

At Broome a run round the town to see the pearl sellers and the pearl buyers, the men of many colored races, Japanese, Andaman Islanders, men from Java and Singapore, a talk with the resident commissioner, a dinner in a full dress of open shirt and white duck trausers—the only bearable costume because of the heat. And after dinner a long, long yarn with the owner of a pearling lugger, a fisher for sharks, an explorer of unknown islands a raconteur of stories of the aboriginal tribes which still continue their primitive way as it was in the beginning.

Then at dawn next day the beginning of the swoop back to Perth. Into the heart of the tropies and the margin and verge of unknown things and out again in six days. And a vision of 3000 miles of country like that of Olympus. Yes, if you would see Australia, "Fly There."

the dust clouds of the dry season breathless after the heat of the long day, but throbbing with the many-hued activities of this amazing semitropical city. The miles of streets hold hints of every part of the East, of Singapore, of Shanghai, of Manila, of Sourabaya.

They are a fascinating, sentient panorama of exotic activity. There is a blaze of light as darkness becomes complete, light from bazaars, native hostelries, garishly illuminated temples. There is a babel of sound, the highpitched voices in many tongues rising above the tumult of the traffic.

The clear peal of a temple bell sometimes penetrates into the clamorous night as the call of a bird through the humming murmur of the jungle. Strange, untraceable noises leap beyond the roaring confusion as one comber breaks beyond its fellows, then loses its identity in the clash of a thousand sounds.

+ + + Yonder, across the way from a row of bazaars, fruit stalls and tiny cafés, the goal of an endless procession of humanity, is the Sealdah Station, terminus of the Eastern Bengal Railway. Its waiting sheds present another such scene as that at Howrah, though on a much smaller scale. In the thick heat of the early evening the hordes of third class passengers squat in groups upon the cool stones of the floor. Water carriers, food venders, peddlers of many things unidentifiable to the European, pass among them, blending their raucous calls with the dull, re-echoing monotone of sound that sweeps like a succession of surf beats through the great station.

Where are they all going, these hundreds of dark-hued folk, these numerous families with their more numerous possessions? Are they such travelers, these Indians, even in their poverty? It is unlikely that they are going far; moving, perhaps, from the city to some country town a score or two miles away, paying but a few annas for their third class passage.

But there, on a long track-at one side, stands awaiting its varied company of passengers the train of our paramount interest, indeed one of the unique and notable trains of all the railways of the world, the express into the far north, into the cool weather, to the very borders of an unknown land, to the shadow of the crowning scenic majesty of this world—the Darjeeling-Himalayan Mail!

+ + + A long train of dark red carriages, first and second classes, intermediate and third, it sometimes carries to the far northeast frontier such a company of all sorts and conditions of men as does not often gather in any railway terminal of the world. For when the holidays are at hand and Calcutta is fleeing the hot, dusty plains for the mountains, as in all lands, folk set forth for the country and the lakes and highlands. Tonight Calcutta, tomorrow morning the base of the foothills, and then in a few hours Darjeeling, one of the true wonder spots of the world!

Past the many carriages I walk, the third class and intermediate, already well filled, at the rear of the train, then the first and second class compartments: Presently a polite young Indian greets me, the exceedingly efficient assistant master of the Sealdah Station. "I have secured a coupe for you, sir," he informs me, very much to my satisfaction. "You will have it all to yourself."

And there it is, a pleasant little compartment, into which my scanty luggage has already been placed. Very much pleased with this accommodating young man I converse with him at some length; touching, among other things, the Indian political situation, for I take him to be typical of the intelligent young Indian. Like so many of the others, I find him to be courteously insistent upon the point of his people's self-determining capacity, but not in the least arrogant. "We do not want at present," he concludes, "to-

DARJEELING | he smiles deprecatingly-"I cannot think of the exact WILIGHT is settling over Calcutta as we drive through the teeming streets of the native city to the Sealdah Station. It is a twilight that is heavy with seal of the control of the settling over Calcutta as we drive through the hesitates a moment, then writes upon his little tablet the word "yoke." "That is it, sir," he declares. "We are not ready yet to throw off the 'yoke' of England." And are not ready yet to throw off the 'yoke' of England." if perhaps the word is not quite justified as descriptive of British rule in India, it is clear what my young Indian friend means. "Good night, sir," he says then, as a series of sounds indicating the immimence of departure commences. "I hope you will have a comfortable night."

> We are about to leave on the Darjeeling-Himalayan Mail, whose very designation suggests at once romance, beauty, majesty, adventure. I notice the names on the cards outside neighboring compartments. "The Chilean Consul-General." "The Countess Z-," Lady -," and a number of persons of lesser note, persons of many nations, from many lands, all eagerly anticipating on the morrow a glimpse of the most glorious scenery of earth, the majestic Himalayan Range from Darieeling.

> A final whistle blows, compartment doors are closed, a chorus of farewells in many tongues arises all the way up and down the long train among all classes of passengers, a quickly moving panorama of white-clad figures files past—and the Darjeeling-Himalayan Mail is off into the night on its 350-mile run to the foothills of the Himalayas, those foothills which are themselves higher than most mountain ranges.

4 4 4 One or two suburban stations and then the long train, drawn by a British locomotive in charge of a British driver, settles down to its heavy night's work, while its company of a score of nationalities and half a score of races composes itself to such slumber as is possible, the third class closely massed on hard benches, the Europeans and well-to-do Indians quite comfortable in their wellarranged berths.

Uneventfully the night passes, and although we doubtless pass through much scenery of note our slumbers, in the ever-cooling temperature, are not interrupted. And almost ere we realize it the morning is at hand and we are at the terminus of the mountain railway which, in its amazing series of bends and spirals, ascends 7500 feet in fifty miles.

Breakfast awaits us and then, with no unnecessary haste, we take our booked places in the toy-like carriages and the long ascent begins, first through semitropic foliage and vegetation, then amid that of temperate climes as the thousands of feet fall below us. The air grows constantly more cooling and at last, as the heights are gained, even sharp. The magnificence of the scenery altogether baffles description, and it is on such a scale as seems to have no bound but space itself. And then Darjeeling -which, of course, is a long story on its own part!

Thrashers and Thrushes

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Please permit me to correct a statement which appeared in The Christian Science Monitor of June 12, regarding the classification of the brown thrasher cently chosen by popular vote to be the state bird for

The brown thrasher is not a thrush, as is stated, but belongs to an entirely distinct family, the Mimidæ, which includes thrashers and mocking birds. The thrushes belong to the Turdidæ, including thrushes and bluebirds. Both families are subdivisions of the order Passeres but are not otherwise related. This is the classification given by Frank M. Chapman, regarded as authority on ornithology, successor in this respect to Elliot Coues.
